THE TRAIN ON THE BRIDGE

A JOURNEY OF AFRICAN SIGNIFICANCE

Kruger Shalati: The Train on the Bridge. One of the most anticipated and exciting new offerings in the iconic Kruger National Park, South Africa. A perfect combination of Africa's most breathtaking natural splendours with well-deserved luxuries aboard a newly refurbished train that's reminiscent of African excellence.

Permanently stationed on the historically-rich Selati Bridge above the Sabie River, Kruger Shalati offers the most unique luxury accommodation in a re-envisioned train which pays homage to the guests who explored the park nearly 100 years ago while welcoming new explorers from near and far.

The train celebrates where the first visits to the iconic park were allowed in the early 1920s, the train would park overnight in the exact spot where Kruger Shalati is positioned. Whether guests are looking for a one-of-a-kind adventure, an enthralling break or to simply immerse themselves in Earth's finest creations, Kruger Shalati looks forward to welcoming each guest on a journey of discovery with nature in the most extraordinary way imaginable.

AFRICAN WARRIOR
QUEEN

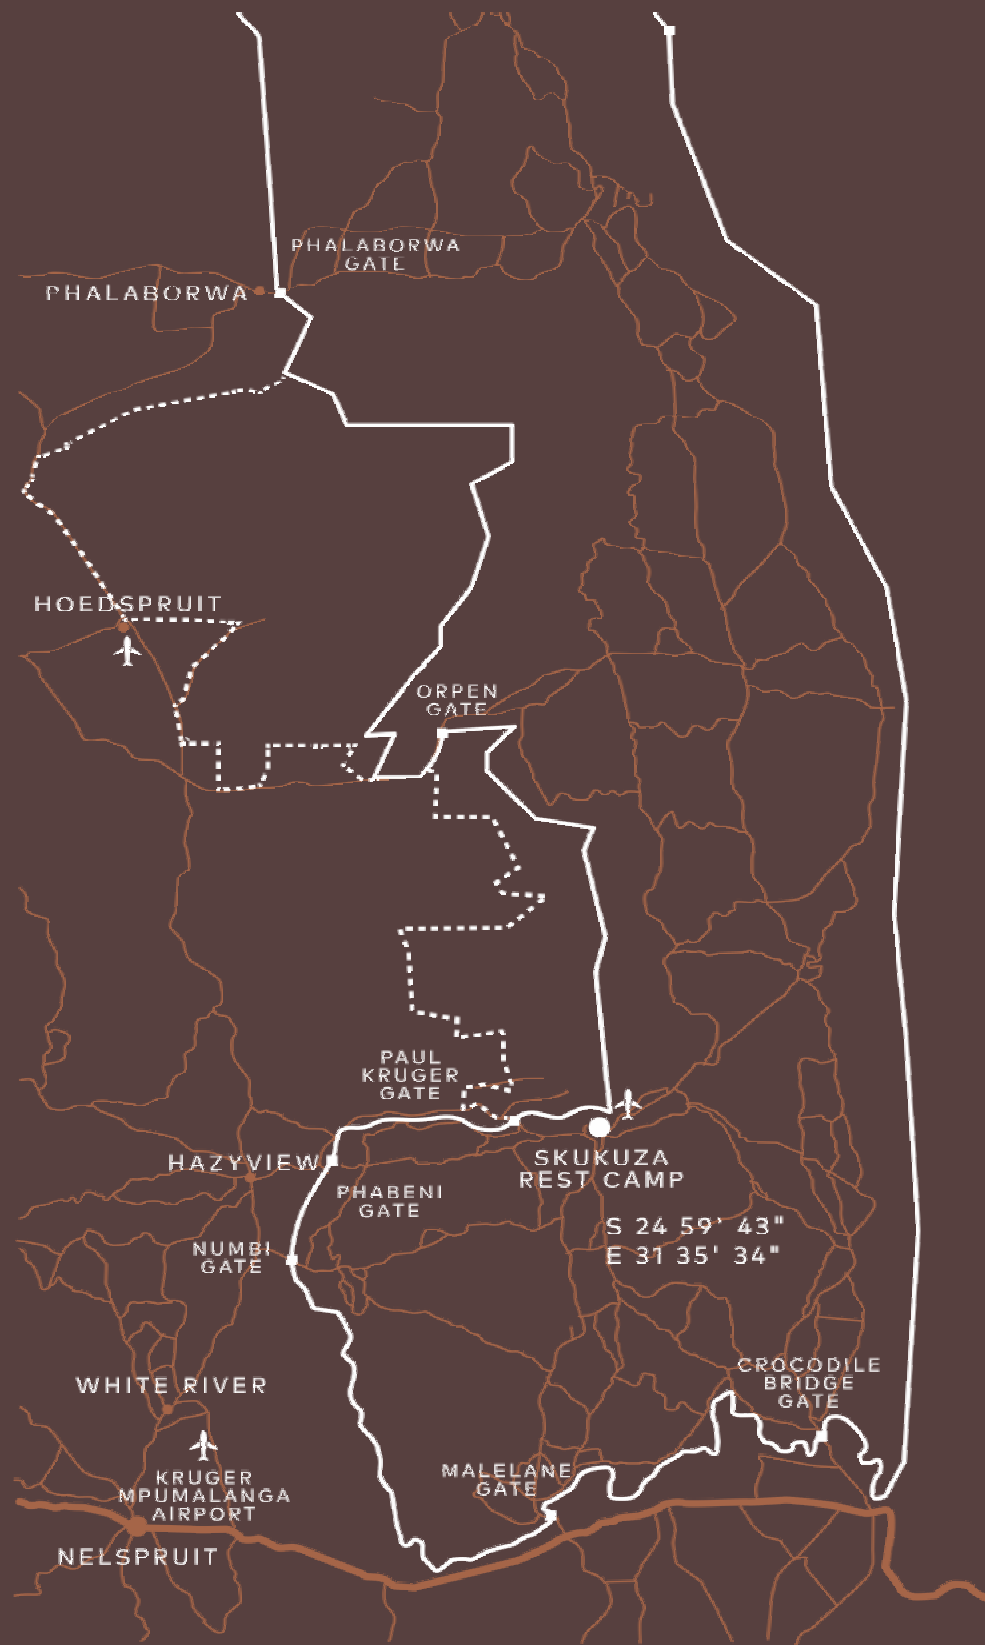

The train name is inspired by Shalati; an African warrior queen.

The origins of Shalati's ruling go back to the 19th century. According to oral tradition, Shalati was one of the first female warrior chiefs of the small Tebula clan, part of the Tsonga tribe that lived in the bush around the Murchison Range in the present-day Limpopo Province.

Shalati warrior hosikati (queen) was no ordinary woman, while most queens wanted a brave king to come and save them, she wanted a bayonet war axe so she could save her clan. She was a warrior for her clan as well as humanity.

During her chieftainship, she learnt how the world worked... but had a vision of a perfect world, one without crime, war and inequality.
